Dear Bob:

A hasty reading of your letter tells me that, of course, I want to help. I am busier, however, than I think you can imagine.

Let me ask you first to read the Epilogue to WHITEWASH II and see if that, or an edited version, would fill the bill. For at least two months, I cannot undertake any writing. I have a book promised last month, one promised last week, and a third one contracted for to have have been delivered this week or next. I will be lucky to do them all in the next two months.

But I will help in any way I can, especially if you can use what I have already written.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
